UNEMPLOYMENT Unpreventable Base Period

Unemployment compensation is usually paid on the basis of wages earned in the "base period".

Base Period

The "base period" is defined as the first 4 quarters of the last 5 completed calendar quarters of wages. The base period determines the wages that will be used to compute the claimant's benefit amounts and which employers will have potential chargeback or reimbursement liability for any benefits paid to the claimant

Base Period Employer

A "base period employer" is one the employee worked for in that period, who's account would be charged by the unemployment office through unemployment taxes.

Example:

- If the claim is filed in April, May or June of current year, the base period is January through December of the last year.
- If the claim is filed in July, August, or September of the current year, the base period is April through December of the last year and January through March of the current year.
- If the claim is filed in October, November, or December of the current year, the base period is July through December of the last year and January through June of the current year.
